Working Papers and Work in Progress

- Do exports of renewable resources lead to resource depletion? Evidence on fisheries

In the case of fisheries, exports are an important cause of resource depletion. This paper uses rich country-species-level fisheries data to estimate the causal effect of a fishery's exports on the collapse of the fishery. Identification is based on an export demand shock originating from Japan. The results reveal that an increase in logged exports by one standard deviation raises the likelihood of a fishery's collapse in the following period by 23 percentage points. Only fisheries without fishing quotas collapse as a result of exports.

- Does trade openness foster resource management? Evidence from fishing quotas

Do resource exports improve the management of renewable resources such as fisheries or forests? Theoretical predictions are ambiguous and this is the first empirical analysis to shed light on the effect of exports on resource management. I construct detailed country-species level fisheries data to investigate whether exporting facilitates the introduction of quota and Territorial Use Rights for Fishing (TURF) programs for fisheries. The results suggest a positive relationship between the value of a fishery's exports and the introduction of quota or TURF programs.

- Does community forest monitoring reduce deforestation? with Louis Graham and Anouk S. Rigterink

This randomized controlled trial investigates the effect of community forest monitoring on welfare and forest conservation in Ugandan community forests. Community monitoring entails monthly measures of forest use. The monitors' findings are discussed in village meetings and displayed in a public place in the village.

- Forest use rules and deforestation in community forest in Uganda with Louis Graham and Anouk S. Rigterink

In this randomized controlled trial, households with access to community forests receive reminders of communal forest use rules. We investigate how improved awareness of forest use rules affects household welfare, forest use, forest degradation and deforestation.

Relevant Work Experience

02/2014 – 04/2014	Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra), London ESRC Internship: I conducted quantitative research on the determinants of fish prices in English ports and explained my results in a policy report.
